AG CLUB TO MEET TONIGHT Will Entertain Junior Farmers and Alumni.

There will be an Ag Club meeting tonight at 7:15 o'clock in the Agricultural Auditorium for the junior farmers, the alumni and former students who are here attending Junior Farmers' Week.

The meeting is to be one of the old fashioned kind. A program is being arranged with something special for the junior farmers. Many old men are here this week and it is planned to get them together at this meeting.

An effort is being made to entertain the junior farmers who have never seen a paddling. Students in the College of Agriculture are looking for a victim and if one can be found the paddling will be held sometime this week.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Gribble Have Son. The stork called at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Gribble on Paris road early this morning and left a twelve-pound boy.

AT THE THEATERS

Hall. Tonight and Thursday—For her education and for being launched in society, just how deeply in debt is a girl to her family? That is the problem which Hector Turnbull deals with in his latest photoplay, "Everything For Sale," in which May McAvoy plays the leading role. The family in this story believed that the girl owed them her whole future and was morally obliged to marry the richest man they could secure for her. The story is an arraignment of the creed of modern society.

Columbia. Tonight and Thursday—Townpeople, University and college students will take part in the musical comedy, "All Aboard," that is to be produced under the auspices of the B. P. O. E. "All Aboard" is a former Broadway production. The scene is laid on the Steamship Florida, thirty minutes before sailing time. Harry Scott is seen as Bill Brady and Richard Crouch as Johnny Thomas, college pals but rivals for the love of Beatrice Sloane, played by Mary Jane Froman. Billy is the favored suitor but when a man gets four teeth knocked out in playing football, complications will arise!

Five Contestants From M. U. For Rhodes Scholarship Selected

A Rhodes scholarship is more of a goal than ever it seems, judging by the number of local students competing. The keenness of competition and the deliberation of the local committee in selecting the five University applicants to appear before the final board of selections in St. Louis. The late Cecil Rhodes would have smiled the smile of complete satisfaction could he have lived to see the appreciation manifested for his world famous legacy.

Rhodes scholarships are international in their scope. They provide for the sending of American students to Oxford University, outside of London, every year. Thirty-two scholars are sent from thirty-two states of the United States every year. In each state in the Union there is a committee for selecting Rhodes scholars, but it is active only two-thirds of the time, for scholars are chosen in each state only two out of three years.

The plan of selection in operation, provides for the division of the forty-eight states of the Union into three groups of sixteen states each. One of the groups of states is inactive one year out of every three. For instance, Missouri was allowed one scholar last year and one this year, but next year she will have none.

Any student having two or more years of college training, and not less than 19 years of age or more than 21, who is also a citizen of the United States of five years residence and unmarried is eligible for application. He can apply through his college even if he lives in another state. If the local committee selects him among the others, he can then appear before the state board of selection for examination. The University of Missouri, because it has an enrollment of more than 2,000 students, is allowed five applicants who can appear before the state board of selection. When the state board selects a student, he is then a scholar. The selection is final. For schooling expenses, he receives an annual stipend of 3,500 pounds or about $1,750.

The applicants from the University of Missouri selected recently are Fred Eldean, John Gilmore, Florian P. Gass, Clark W. Jennings, and Sigurd Sandzen. They will appear in St. Louis December 3 in competition with other applicants from Missouri colleges before the state board of selection for Missouri Rhodes scholar.

In recent years, or since the war ended, the University of Missouri has been favored by having one of its applicants selected each year. Raymond Brandt received the scholarship in 1919, John G. Madden in 1920 and Corwin Edwards in 1921.

The first Missouri scholar was R. E. Blodgett of the University of Missouri that was in 1904. The scholars from this institution have been since then, E. H. Eckel, 1910; and E. Varnon Nash, 1916.

The war prevented the granting of scholarships from 1916 to 1919. Since the latter year, they have become much of a goal among University students, as evinced by the record.

bringing the screen version of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" to the Columbia Theater on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week.

"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by the Spanish author, Vicente Blasco Ibanez, is now in its one hundred sixty-first edition and it is estimated that it has been read by more than 25,000,000 people. The characters in the book are intensely realistic and their baffled attempts to readjust themselves to the demands of war days comes with unusual force on American people today, who have so recently had the same struggle. Above this struggle Ibanez makes the reader see the awesome figures of the four horsemen, War, Conquest, Famine and Death.

June Mathis followed the novel closely in dramatizing it for the producer, Rex Ingram, without losing the power of the book.

CANADIANS ARE SIMILAR TO THE PEOPLE OF U. S.

R. R. Hudelson Returns From Farm In Alberta to Teach Short Course Subjects.

"The Canadian people of Southern Alberta can not differ greatly from the people of the United States because most of them are from the States," said R. R. Hudelson who recently returned from Alberta, Canada, where he is a part owner of 480 acres of irrigated land.

Although the environments of the two countries are similar, many people believe that the Canadians are provincial. Mr. Hudelson did not agree with this idea. He said that it was surprising how many persons who settle there come from the states of Washington and Idaho and how alive the communities were in respect to social life.

"The community plays an important part," said Mr. Hudelson in referring to that part of Alberta where he is located. The small town of Rainer, on the edge of the land he owns, consists of a post-office, store and community house. Here are held community dances which are popular all seasons of the year.

Elementary schools compare favorably with those of this part of the country. In the larger towns there are high schools; there are several excellent agricultural schools within the province. According to the number of students of high school age, not as many attend these higher institutions as they do in this country, but Mr. Hudelson suggested that this was probably due to the newness of the country and the opportunities for work open to young people.

He found that wages were somewhat higher there than here, and that there was plenty of work for the laboring man. The land which Mr. Hudelson owns is a part of a large tract known as the Canadian Pacific Railway Project. It belonged to the Canadian Pacific Railway which sells the land and water rights to individuals. The first land sold at $50 an acre but $75 is the average price now.

Mr. Hudelson has spent eight months each year for two years on his land. He will return for four months next spring. At present he is working in the experiment station of the College of Agriculture, and is teaching several short course subjects.
